

Human Resources (HR) Screening

Estimated time needed: 2 minutes

Introduction

The HR screening process is usually the first step in the hiring process. This is a crucial step in the selection process as it helps organizations eliminate unsuitable candidates early on.

According to a TD.org article, only about 25% of resumes make it past the automated screening software and are seen by human recruiters. However, this number may vary depending on the company and the job position.

Objectives

After completing this reading, you will be able to:

- Outline the Human Resource (HR) screening process
- Apply tips to assist you in improving the chances your resume will be selected

The HR screening process

Depending on the organization and role, the HR may receive thousands of applications for a job posting. HR professionals will review the applications to determine who qualifies for the next phase of the hiring process.

Most organizations have a solid screening process in place in order to find the best people. With technological advances, several organizations use the automated screening process.

During the screening process, the HR or the automated system will review resumes and cover letters, verify qualifications, and assess a candidate's experience and skills. The screening process may be strictly accomplished within HR or may include other screening formats, such as phone screening, video screening, and assessment-based screening.

Irrespective of the format, the intent of screening is to make sure that the candidates meet the hiring manager's requirements.

Note: In some organization, the HR screening process is combined with the first stage interview.

Typical screening questions

Here are some screening questions that you should have answers ready for.

- Tell me something about yourself.
- What is your current experience ad role?
- What is your team size?
- Why are you applying for this position?
- What are your core strengths?
- Which cybersecurity related tools are you comfortable with?
- What are your salary expectations?
- If selected, when can you join?

Tip: You can use your elevator pitch to respond to most of these questions.
